THE NEW LEAVES.

What a fluttering of "new leaves" there will be to-night, as all the world makes good resolutions for the coming year.

They will "swear off" who never swore before, and they who oft have sworn will swear " the more.

This sounds suspiciously like poetry, but it is the sober, prosaic truth. It is better to form good resolutions at a set time than never to make them. It is perhaps better to make and break them than never to try to improve. Though it may be "never too late to mend." it is surely never too early to resolve and to Success to all good resolutions, and a Happy New Year as the result!

THE GREAT JUBILEE.

To-day is the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination as a priest of the good Pope at Rome. And to-morrow the event will be celebrated as a "golden jubilee," with the pomp and ceremony which can only be witnessed at St. Peter's, in the Holy City.

THE WORLD to-day contains a full historical and biographical sketch of the occasion and its subject, together with a description of the notable gifts and the preliminary exercises. THE SUNDAY WORLD will continue the story as told by a special staff of correspondents at Rome.

ARBITRATION.

The Reading Company could not do a wiser thing than to submit the fairly debatable differences with its employees to the arbitration of three fair men like Gronov W. CHILDS.

The matter of carrying freight that is delivered to it, from whatever source, is not one for arbitration. It is bound to do this by its duty to the public and its obligations as a common carrier.

But there are minor matters, such as the discharge or retention of particular men, and the recognition of the undoubted right of workingmen to their organization, which may probably be settled by arbitrators.

A giant needs to know how wisely to use his strength-especially a giant corporation.

NOT A SERPENTLESS EDEN.

America is indeed "a smiling garden," to a considerable extent, Mr. CARNEGIE. But, like the first garden, it has its "sarpints," and one of the worst of the lot is the monopoly anaconda in your own State of Pennsylvania.

This reptile now has in its folds the miners who are working for an average wage of 90 cents a day. It has squeezed the life out of competition in the oil business. It is strangling a labor strike against corporation arrogance. It writhes with satisfaction at every advance in the price of coal.

The "smiling garden" needs the pruning knife and the snake-killer.

THE ATHENIAN ARROAD.

Slugger Sullivan does injustice to his "Boston culchaw" in his communication to the Sportsman. It is vigorous, but slangy.

A mouth is not called a " potato trap " in high athletic circles at the Hub. To describe a brother pugilist as "an advertising sandwich" may be graphic, but it is not up to the Harvard sporting standard.

JOHN L. should remember that the true Bostonian, when in Rome, does as the Bostonians do, with no weak concession to the Romans. The champion should endeavor to carry about with him wherever he goes the atmosphere of the modern Athens.

THE WORLD'S Washington correspondent presents the President in a good light, and no doubt the true one, in saying that " the tariff problem" is consuming more of his time than the next Democratic National Convention.

Mr. GLADSTONE drops a bearish but sensible observation in saying that " war will not break out now-it is too cold." Jack Frost is a great peace-keeper.

BOB HILLIARD BESIEGED.

A FEMALE MESMERIST WANTED TO TRY AN EXPERIMENT ON HIM.

Mr. Hilliard Did Not Seem to Understand Her Assertion that She Had Written to Him in Valu-It Was All a Mistake on Her Part, as a Stupefied Circus Usber at Longth Managed to Explain.

Mr. Bob Hilliard sat in box No. 9 at the afternoon performance of the Robbins Winter Circus at the American Institute yesterday. He was accompanied by three ladies, a long cane and a broad smile.

The smile was occasioned by nothing that Mrs. Langtry's ex-leading man saw in either of the circus arenas or on the elevated stage which divides the two rings, for the regular afternoon performance had not yet begun.

It was a smile stirred up, as smiles sometimes are even on the handsomest faces, by the memory of an episode of recent occur-

It seems that Mr. Hilliard, on entering the circus, stopped for a moment's chat with the genial proprietor of the show. There is not the faintest point of similarity in the personal appearance of these two gentlemen. Beyond the fact that both of them are men in the bloom of youth, with the stamp of health and enjoyment of life imprinted on their countenances, they have in their physical make-up nothing in common.

Mr. Hilliard is of the Oriental, Moorish, or Spanish type of beauty. He can wear red roses in his buttonhole with great effect. Mr. Robbins cannot. If Mr. Robbins were given to boutonnieres (which doesn't appear to be the case) he would be limited to lilacs, mign-onettes or some neutral-tinted plant which onettes or some neutral-tinted plant which would correspond with what may be called the royal rosy type of masculine beauty. Nevertheless, in spite of the wide dissimi-larity in their appearance, these gentlemen were confounded in the mind of a female of advanced years who entered the circus while they were engaged in conversation, and who, having been informed by an usher that one of the two was Mr. Robbins, awaited in am-of the two was Mr. Robbins, awaited in ambush her opportunity to attack him.

When, a moment or two later, Mr. Robbins was called away to attend to some one of the duties incidental to running a big circus in the metropolis, this female promptly decided that the gentlement who remained behind was the proprietor of the show.

For two weeks she had been writing letters of Frank Robbins solicities the concertuity to Frank Robbins soliciting the opportunity to be allowed the exhibition of her talen s as a mesmerist in conjunction with the trained elephants, bare-back riders, gymnasts, acro-bats and other multitudinous features of the uccessful winter circus. Now was her opportunity for a personal in-terview, and she did not hesitate to embrace it. Tripping over to where Mr. Hilliard stood, she opened the conversation in the folstood, she opened the conversation in the low-lowing abrupt manner:

"I hope you received my letters?"
It is said that the handsome actor gets many letters. He did not, however, remember this particular correspondent.

"I beg your pardon, madam," he began,
but I"—— Oh, never mind," interrupted the female. "I am not easily discouraged. If I did not feel sure that I possess the power to charm, it would be a different matter. I know that you are a busy man, and I suppose you are overrun with offers, but I am convinced that if you will give me an opportunity to exhibit my rare gifts you will not hesitate to take me. I have never failed. May I give you a pri-vate demonstration?"

The situation was growing embarrassing.
Mr. Hilliard glanced at the box in which the ladies who had accompanied him to the circus were seated, and saw that their eves were riveted upon himself and his unknown com-

"My dear madam," he began, but he was My dear madam," he began, but he was allowed to proceed no further.

"I will not be repussed without an oppor-tunity to show that I possess all the magnet-ism that I claim," said the unknown lady. I have written to you over and over again and have received no satisfaction. The trust my ability, but I will not permit you to ignore my claims. Show me to your office; call in a few of your friends, and if I do not in five minutes convince you that my propo-sition is worthy of attention I will relinquish all claim to your consideration "

"You are yourself an excellent subject Allow me to place my hand on your fore-head. Don't be afraid ' (for Mr. Hilliard had started back in genuine dismay). "I will charm you to sweet dreams in a moment. I have been told that you are a fair man. You surely will give me an opportunity to prove that I am all that I profess to be." At this point the confused usher rallied to inform the lady that the genafficiently tleman to whom she was speaking was not Mr. Robbins, and that Mr. Robbins had left word that he could not at present find room in his show for a female mesmerist however talented.

To make the matter still more embarrassing To make the matter still more embarrassing for Mr. Hilliard, however, when that gentleman recovered from the stupor into which the astounding propositions of the unknown lady had thrown him, he discovered that he was surrounded by a multitude of familiar faces. Mr. Robbins had extended an invitation to the companies of the Casino and the Bijou Opera-House to be present at yesterday's matince, and the ladies of those two popular thea res had very generally accepted the invitation.

UNION PACIFIC DAYS.

Unexampled Scenes of Crime and Lawless. ness While the Road Was Building.

[From the Citeago Journal,] Henry S. Cameron, who for the last twenty-five years has been a railroad contractor and has travlled through the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific in the line of his profession gives the folowing account of some of his exp riences in the cons ruction of railroads in the West.

" My first lar, e contract," began Mr. Cameron, was in connection with the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad. The construction of this oad has always been con-idered a wonderful fest, and so it was in its conception, but in its execution it was one of the easiest tasks I ever engaged in. From the Platte to the river Jordan in Utah the country presents fewer engineering difficulties country presents fewer engineering difficulties than any I ever saw, and there was scarcely a place between 0m ha and Weber Carron, a obstance of over a thou and miles, where any grading was necessary. But this was not known to the authorities at Washington, and one of the most pooly impudent robbelles I ever heard of was perpetrated by the Union Pacific Company, in wel-founded reliance upon the Government's carelessness and lack of knowledge.

"The lawlessness that prevailed during the construction of the road was sometifing unexampled in the country since the early days of california. The workmen were Iri h for the most part, an inclined to be violent, but they were not murderous. But the road gangs were accompanied by a perfect swarm of yamolers who robbed the men of their last cent and were a p-riect pest. These men were old frontiersmen who were accustomed to settling all disputes with knife and pistol, and the Ir s. fell like sheep oefore them. At the right of each dealer at the numerous faro tables lay a heave army revolver, with the barrel sawed off to render its he nothing more easy and rapid, and in many cases the caches on the hammer were filed away. The reason for the swas that a proof of this kind could be deach ried in a second by simply drawing back the hammer and letting it fail again, thus saving several seconds of valuable time. Before such men the Ir sa, unskilled in arms, were helpless, and many hundress were killed before the road was completed. Sometimes Judge Lynch stepped in, but generally the murders went on as if nothing had happ ned. The whole road was ilined with the women head-boards of the slain, bearing the name of the mureered man and the such and such a date. the Ir s : fell like sheep before them. At the right bearing the name of the nur-eres man and the simile but significant words, 'Killed at such and such a date.'

'Cheyenne and Laramie, which were each the depots of the road for some time, were particularly law-as places in those days, but they both paled refore the right of the roads, but they both paled refore the right of the roads were out at Promontory. In Utah, where the Uni n and Central roads were brought together, and a prifect pandemodition ensued. For fifty in les the roads were built side by side, as there was a dispute as to the berritory belonging to each, and both wished to obtain the point which it claimed as its terminus. The gan, as were guarded by armed men, between woming ally Shibs often spring up, and the losses were, in the argregate, as heavy as those of a considerable battle. The dispute was thinked the roads met at Ogden, which has ever since been the terminus of each.

'Ween the construction was completed there were many thousands of men without employment in a strange country. The suffering that ensue, was great. A few went to the mines and a few found permanent employment on the roads, but the great majority were in a respectate condition. The effect of this was to increase highway robbery to a most alarming extent, and for months after the men were sischarged no one could move about at night with any lecting of safety. Some of the most desperate outlaws the West has ever seen date their career of crime from this time. A man lived in the midst of exclement in those days, and I often regret that I shall never see their like again."

QUINN CROWDED THEM OUT.

THE WORKINGWOMEN'S MOVEMENT ALMOST AT A STANDSTILL.

The Originators of the Work Did Not Want to Join the Knights of Labor or Any Other Organization, but Quinn Got Hold of It-They May Form a New Society and

'Our effort to ameliorate the condition of the workingwomen of the city has all come to naught," said one of the brave women who some months ago inaugurated at Pythagoras Hall a series of meetings looking to the organization for mutual benefit and protection shoulder. The point lace veil, which will of the poorly paid women wage slaves of the

"What is the cause?" asked the sympathetic reporter to whom the assertion was made "It is all because Master Workman Quinn and his District Assembly 49 want to and has in fact gobbled us up.

"When we started the movement it was with no idea of recruiting for the Knights of Labor or any labor organization or party, for the women whom we sought to benefit were of the class that could not support themselves with their earnings and could not certainly aid in the maintenance of the Knights of La bor with initiation fee and dues.

"Not only workingwomen, but rich women were expected to unite in the effort, and we had many noble women with their scalskins and diamonds present at our meetings to assist us in our attempt at raising up the poor workers.

"True, some of the women, members of the organizing committee, were Knights of Labor and trades unionists, but others were not. The idea was to divorce the movement entirely from labor organization. It was to be an effort for the independence of women.

"Quinn, of 49, saw this, and he got the women of his District Assembly in it to obtain control of the organization and force it into the Knights of Labor. The result is that we have been unable to reach the class that we have been unable to reach the class that we hoped to benefit. They will not come to our meetings, and the charitable rich ladies whom we had enlisted in our cause have dropped out, while Quinn and his clique rule."

Another of the ladies who was engaged in this laudable enterprise was seen by the reporter and asked regarding the statement that the organization has failed of its object.

that the organization has failed of its object. She said:

"Yes. Mrs. Daniels, our chairwoman, saw that there was no use of opposing the 49 element and resigned. Miss Gabriel Greeley and Mrs. Thomas have failed to attend recent meetings for the same reason. Now there are left but two or three of the enthusiastic women who originated the idea, am ng them being Miss Mary C. Andrews and Miss Ida Van Etten, and I doubt if they will try longer to battle against the odds which Quinn has opposed to them. opposed to them. The only thing to do is to let 49 have this

The only thing to do is to let 49 have this organization—but in getting it it will secure no more than it had before—then organize a new movement and exclude from it the women agitators of District Assembly 49, who women agitators of District Assembly 49, who see in the organization only an opportunity to recruit the Knights of Labor, and, by their action, defeat the very object of the movement—aid to the poor workingwomen who will not and camnot be brought into the fold of the Knights of Labor or the trades unions. "You can put it down that Mr. Quinn has the Pythagoras Hall movement under his thumb, and that it has been crushed. I wish, however, that you would say that this man Quinn says what is not true when he says that 49 gave us the use of the hall for nothing. We paid for that hall every night that we used it—not very much, it is true, but all that was asked."

SEARCHING FOR GOLD.

It Is Elusive, and Almost All Great Finds Are the Result of Accidents.
[Prentice Mulford in Milwankee Telegraph.]

Gold, as a rule, is the last thing you will see in gold-bearing soil. You may have it under your feet at the rate of $100 to the bucketful of drt, and not a grain will you see unless that soil hap; ens to be by a recent rain. Then, if a stream of water has cut it away, washing it clean to the ledge, you may see lying thereon the dull yellow bits, and you may take them for bits of brass or brass filings. Gold in its native state is not a showy metal, not near as showy as the glittering yellowish pyrites of iron, which so often, by the inexpe-metal, not near as showy as the glittering yellowish pyrites of iron, which so often, by the inexperienced, has been mistaken for the genuine ore. A man, long out of tuck, stroil don-morning in an asimle-sim od of mind out of the town of Columbia, Tuolumine County. He sat down under a tree and with his stick commenced poking and prying at a rusty looking boulder in the soil before him. As he continued to poke and pry a duil yellowish the color sppeared beneath the coating of relidish rust with which the lump was covered—rust secunimulated during its lone rest from the iron permeated soil. He examined more closely, and found himself in possession of a nugger, nearly all god, an worth about $10,000.

The big strikes welen came under my observation were slitter result of similar accidents—as at Chambers Bar, on the Tuolumne, where the seeming misfortune of a breaking teservoir led to a rush of water over ground where no gold was supposed to be, and in the deep furrow out by the water, there on the ledge lay coarse gold; as on the Mariposa trail, where one day a luckless men, packing grub and biankers, sat on a bit of white, lagged rock to cat his dinner, and after eating and while snokin, he idly pried with his jack-knife bits from the rotten leage and found one of the rich st quarrz veins in the State; as at the Kawhide kanch calm in Tuolumne, where the long-continued wanter rails of 1861-2 (lifty-nine consecutive days of dirizine and hard water, landslips everywhere, communication out off with Stockton, and four at $100 per barrel)—well this cause I a cava of diri in a bank c aim supposed to be worked out, and revealed thousands and thousands of dolars in coar e, ragged umps, just as it had failen out of the rotten quarity maffix. A famous professor came a lew months afterwards, made a survey of seme ground adjoining, pronounced it rich, pock-ted his $1,800 fee, and on that ground and on the some ground adjoining, pronounced it rich, pock ted his $1,500 fee, and on that ground and on th sted his $1,800 fee, and on that ground and on the strength of that survey certain capitalists but texpensive mining works, and when I passed by them years afterwards the squirrels and woodpeckers only held possess on, for the professor could not see under the ground any bitter than any one eise, and I have slawars noticed that it is the unlearned, unscientific, rigged, often reckless "prospector" who finds the "lead" first, and the "professor" comes slong and tells why it should be found there afterwards.

Every-Day Topics of Interest to Readers of The Evening World.

To the Editor of The Running World: Your correspondent "South American" might go down there (rather than to West Indies) and in Uruguay, the Argentine Republic or Chili find a healthy, vigorous climate, perfectly suited to New Yorkers. Chili is preferable to the others, being the on is preterable to the others, being the most enlightened and go-ahead State in the country, although that is not saying much for it. Valparaiso, excepting 'Frisco, is the finest city on the Pacific coast. The people are close and distrustful, but foreigners make out well all the same, and the finest stores on Calle Esmeralda, &c., are owned by them.

Prisoners of Poverty.
To the Editor of The Evening World: I was much interested in your account of the women who work on ladies' underwear at $3 and $4 per week. Many of these articles are bought by women of wealth. Why don't they refuse to buy such articles unless there is some mark upon them or other assurance that the makers were fairly paid for their work? There was a movement of this sort some years ago to help the shirt-makers, and it did help them as long as it was kept up. Dec. 30.

Turn Over a New Leaf.

Why don't the big manufacturing house now employing women workers on starvation wages turn over a new leaf for 1888, and give their workers fair pay for a fair day's work! their workers fair pay for a fair day's work.
If they would agree all around to do this their profits would be as large, if not larger, than now. In these days of combination why can't there be a combine to help the workers occasionally?

The Way to Become an Engineer.

Editor of The Evening World; In reply to the young man who is anxious to become an engineer, I advise him to adopt a course that many are anxious to avoid, that a course that many are anxious to avoid, that is, to begin at the bottom as fireman, and, by close attention and perseverance, to work himself up. In leisure moments devote the time to reading and informing himself through some standard work (of which there are many published in the city) in the technicalities of the business, as more or less of it is required by the examiners. There are too many so-called engineers in the city who before getting their license have had actually fore getting their license have had actually no manual training at all, and are not fit to hold the positions they do.

Lincoln as a Literary Artist. 1 From the Portland Oregonian. 1 It is a well-known fact that Lincoln revised the original draft of Seward's famous letter of instructions to Minister Adams in May, 1881, not only correcting the grave and dangerous blunders it contained, but its language, so that it came from L neoling hands a document of greater dignity and finish of language. The December Century is authority for the further very interesting fact that Seward wrote the original draft of the famous closing passage of Lincoln's first inaugural, but as it came from Seward's hands it was comparatively poor and mean in expression. Lincoln rewrote it, and, while preserving the germ of the fine poetic thought it contained, clethed it in its present though the contained of the first poetic through the contained of the first poetic in the standard of the first poetic in the first poetic in the first poetic in the contained of the first poetic in the classical and ornate Seward, but he was a finer if crary artist, since he could not only mend his state-m-nship, but correct and illuminate his style. Miss Glover arrived when all the others were seated. The building was crowded. She had to walk from one end of it to the other to reach her seat, and of course she attracted a great deal of attention. Never had it looked so completely as though the lady's enemies were correct in their estimate of the color of her hair. Perhaps it was the handsome sealskin dolman that she wore which showed it off so conspicuously. Miss Glover reached her seat, divested herself of her furs, acknowledged coquettishly that she knew every one was looking at her, and waited for the circus to begin. The music struck up, the doors were thrown open music struck up, the doors were thrown open and, to her disgust, she saw four white horses trot in and prance around the ring. Miss Glover crimsoned with vexation and the people near her simply roared with laughter. For half an hour she struggled with her mortification, but it was a hard half hour. The story was told at the Bijou Opera-House yesterday (not by Miss Glover), and it has been called "A Christmas Tale: or, The Red Head, the Little Fawn and the White Horse,"

A physicism who went to see Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the other night, was astonished at Mr. Mansfield's wit, but professed himself unable to understand how the actor managed to keep up his stertorous breathing as Mr. Hyde. Said he: "It is a well known fact that continued stertorous breathing generally produces anesthesia. A patient who has breathed very heavily for some three minutes generally becomes unconscious. Yet Mr. Mansfield is certainly "all there." The play is drawing crowded houses.

"The Humming Bird," as given by the clever Salsbury Tronbadours has been extraordinarily successful at Pope's Theatre, St. Louis. It is said that 10,000 people saw the play during Sunday, Monday and Tuesday last. This seems to imply that the Troubadours will not go abroad as they intended. After the St. Louis engagement they go for four weeks to Texas, and then return to the East, playing at the Windsor Theatre in this city on Easter Monday. Miss Lillian Olcott, who is to open her reg-ular season at the Fourteenth Street Theatre in August, will probably sail for France early in February to look after a play that she contemplates buying there. At the pres-ent time she is still constant to "Theodora," which she is playing in the far West with

Next week Gillette, in "The Great Pink Pearl," will play at Hooley's Theatre, Chicago, in direct opposition to his own play, "Held by the Enemy," at the Grand Opera-House. There is considerable rivalry going on between the acents of each company, who seem to be blissfully unconscious of the fact that Gillette feels a father's interest in them both. The "Pink Pearl" people advertise that Gillette, the author, appears only at Hooley's Theatre, while the "Held by the Enemy" folks announce that Gillette's play is being produced at the Grand Opera-House, and "the play's the thing." In the meantime the Chicago Opera-House boasts of the coming production of "She"—Gillette's adaptation. At any rate, this American playright cannot complain that he is badly treated in his own country.
